What Educators are Saying

“TeachingBooks is one of my go-to resources when helping educators find information around books. It helps educators find activities and lesson plans, build text sets, find resources for books, watch author interviews and so many more fantastic things! Did you know that with the click of the ‘List Analysis Report’ button, you get instantaneous feedback on how well-balanced your text set is? When providing professional development around our statewide digital resources, TeachingBooks is always one I do a little deeper dive into. It’s hands-down my favorite resource and provides immensely valuable information on thousands of books whether you teach Pre-K or 12th grade!”

– Ann Thomas, Instructional Technology and Library Consultant, Central Rivers AEA

“I encourage teachers to use TeachingBooks because there is always so much more information to get to all in one place. Many times there are discussion questions, and sometimes even quizzes and multiple choice questions that teachers can use within groups. I also encourage students to use TeachingBooks so they can learn more about the author of a book and see what other books an author has written they may want to read. Having a little more background knowledge about the author and how they came to write the exact story they’re reading seems to help students invest just a little bit more. Personally, I use TeachingBooks as a coach for Battle of the Books. There are so many useful resources to help coach students in reading and comprehending the book, the author, difficult vocabulary, social issues and so many other options. TeachingBooks is always my first go-to tool when it comes to wanting more information about books and their authors.”
